pass the Federal Green New Deal of Washington

Good news! We've discovered a national Green New Deal Network (GNDN), a coalition of national and state groups working to win GND federal, state and local policies. Even better news, we've been invited to join them with monthly strategy calls to shared resources and more. Before our next meeting, please preview their message and discuss with others:

Quick Summary from the GNDN:

What is the Green New Deal Network? The Green New Deal Network is a united front coalition of community, environmental justice, green, and labor organizations united for the purpose of coordinating strategic campaigns that will change the political landscape, pass groundbreaking Green New Deal legislation at all levels of government, and defend its implementation.

What is GNDN's Theory of Change? GNDN's Theory of Change has three interdependent components: (A) building a united front, (B) power-building, and (C) a mutually reinforcing state/national feedback loop. Check out GNDN's Theory of Change here.

What are GNDN's guiding principles? Our guiding principles are as follows:

- We bring together racial justice, climate, labor, Indigenous, care, and other movements in a shared strategy to win a federal Green New Deal.
- We build the good and name the bad while working synergistically with other coalitions, leading campaigns focusing on “stopping the bad.”
- We advocate for equitable investments in historically underserved and disadvantaged communities, including, but not limited to, Black, Indigenous nations and communities, Latinx, Arab, Asian, and Pacific Islander communities, and support the efforts of these communities to counteract racial, ethnic, gender, and other social and economic injustices.
- We work to expand green union jobs, safe working conditions, and fairness for workers and communities affected by economic transitions.

- We demonstrate mutual respect and principled struggle, honor our collective agreements, and recognize the inherent differences in a united front coalition.
- We operate by soliciting broad input and a majority vote.
